

In. a government bottomed on the will of all, the life and liberty of eveiy individual citizen becomes interesting to all.

9-

The government which can wield the arm of the people must be the strongest possible.

10. History in general
only informs us what bad government is.

ii.

Nothing can establish firmly the Republican principles of our government but an establishment of them in England.

12.

The duty of an upright administration is to pursue its course steadily, to know nothing of these family (party) dissensions and to cherish the good principles of both parties.

13-

Where an office is local we never go out of the limits for the officers.

14.

It will be forever seen that of bodies of men even elected by the people, there will always be a greater proportion aristocratic than among their constituents.

IS-

A merchant is naturally a Republican [Democrat] and can be otherwise only from a vitiated state of things.

16.

The happiness of society depends so much on preventing party spirit from infecting the common intercourse of life that nothing should be spared to harmonize and amalgamate the parties in social circles.

17-The Presidency is the only office in the world about which I